

THINKING MAPS®

Write from the Beginning...and Beyond Response to Text

June 26-28, 2017 | Columbia, South Carolina

Response to Text TOT

While responding to literary or informational text is not “officially” included in the types of writing domains, it is closely aligned with the expository/explanatory domains. Instruction in responding to literary or informational text enables students to understand how different types of discourse are “put together” and provides a scaffold that empowers them to construct more effective compositions.

Response to Text requires the comprehension of a piece of literary or informational discourse, and therefore, educators will be made aware of exactly what is involved in this skill of comprehension including what is actually written in the text as well as what is implied “between the lines.”

Participants in the training will:

- Comprehend a piece of discourse from the literal to the inferential levels of thinking
- Understand what is actually written in the text as well as information that is included in illustrations and other visual images
- Grasp how the information is organized, as well as the effectiveness/ impact of the construction on the readers’ overall understanding of the text
- Examine the text with critical eye including effectively utilizing rubrics for assessing student proficiency, the development of lesson plans, and the creation of step-by-step directions for formal response to literacy and Informational text

Registration Fee: $650

If you are interested in bringing a team to this training, please register online or complete this form and fax or mail it to our office in Cary, NC.
